Sewing, knitting, bridge play occasionally, and reminiscences of summer vacations with anticipations of some yet to come, all were part of the enjoyment shared Wednesday afternoon by a congenial little group of friends who lunched with Mrs. George H. Walker, 2425 Valencia street.

While not formally organized as a club, this set of young matrons has been holding just such pleasant affairs from time to time for the past two years. When received this week in Mrs. Walker's home, they enjoyed the arrangement of flowers which had given not only the luncheon tables, but the rooms themselves where bowls of zinnias were especially effective.

Mrs. Walker had the assistance of her mother, Mrs. Margaret Barnes, in entertaining her friends, who included Mesdames Charles McDaniel, George Spielman, Frederick Elliott, Robert Guild, C. Harold Dale, Gail Jordan, Alvin Stauffer, Albert Harvey and the latter's house guest, Miss Josephine Stevens, of Washington, D. C.

As Christmas rolls around each year to the new home on North Flower street to be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Robinson and their young daughter, Jeanne Louise, a living Christmas tree in their garden not only will reflect the spirit of the season, but will wreath in living green, memories of happy neighborhood associations in their present home on Spurgeon street.

COME TO CHURCH

The Church is the meeting place for God and His People

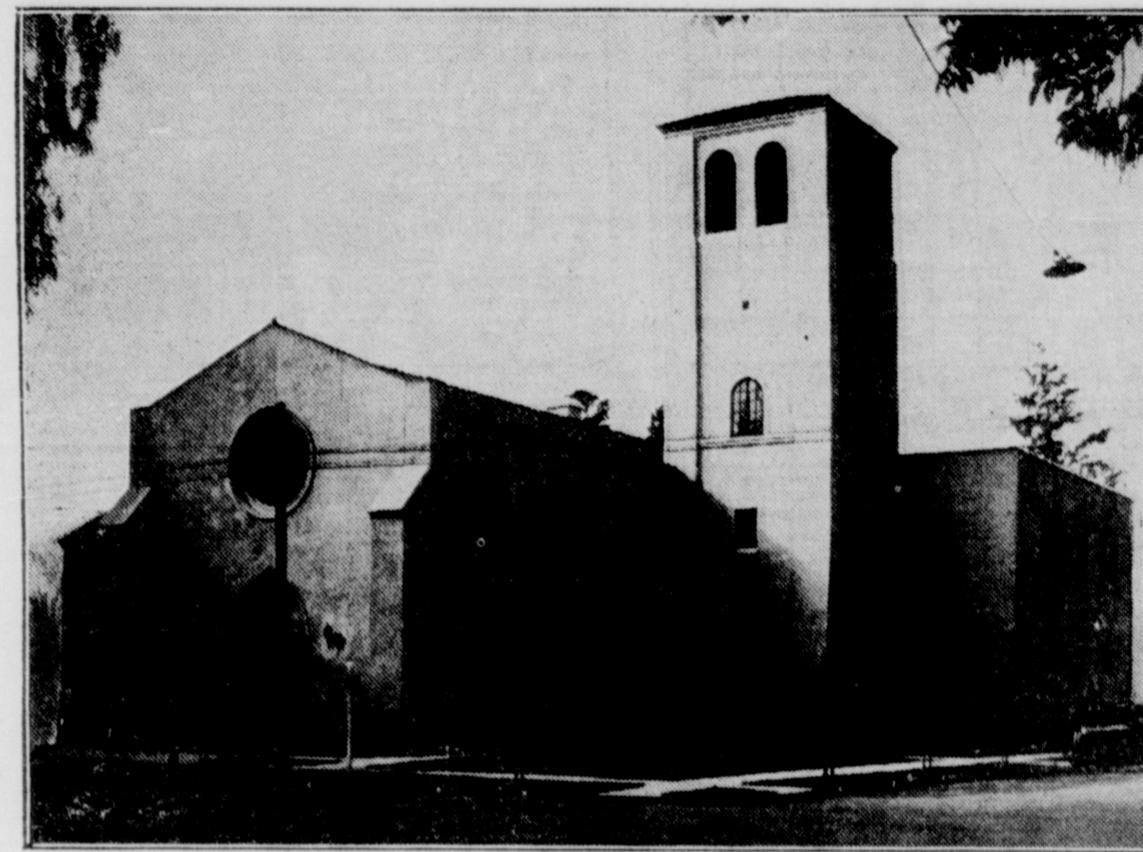

REV. CALVIN A. DUNCAN

A SERMONETTE

"COME TO CHURCH CAMPAIGN"

By CALVIN A. DUNCAN, Pastor
First Presbyterian Church, Tustin

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CORNER MAIN AND C STREETS—TUSTIN

Hours of Service: Sunday, 10 A.M. Junior Church, 11 A.M. Evenings, 7:30 P.M. Bible Study, Wednesday, 7:30 P.M.

"Living for Jesus who died in my place,
Bearing on Calv'ry my sin and disgrace.
Such love constrains me to answer His call,
Follow His leading and give Him my all."

Isn't this reasonable? Isn't this the fair thing to do?

If Christ is Lord, there is no place for discouragement. He becomes our strength and our defender. The Negroes have a song which goes, "You can't get to heaven in a rockin' chair . . . I ain't goin' to grieve my Lord any more." The greatest hindrance to the progress of the cause of Christ today is the "rockin' chair" Christian. Discouragement makes invalids of many Christians who take up their chairs and sit.

There is no room for self in the heart occupied with Christ. When Christ becomes Lord, that person ceases to look for slights. The miners wear shoes with an inner toe made of steel to protect their feet from falling rocks. The Christian must wear shoes. (See Eph. 6:15.) Then he will feel no hurt when people step on his toes. Christ said to be saved we must be converted and become as little children.

But childishness, which is always on the outlook for slights and pouts in the corner with feelings hurt, is unconvinced childlessness, and is an abomination unto the Lord.

There is no place for resentment or for spite when Christ is Lord. Such a one can't hold a grudge. If you dislike a person, it may mean you are jealous of that person. Joseph's brothers first envied him. Look out, Joseph, a rattlesnake is hiding in your path; the rattlesnake of envy. First they envied him and then they hated him and plotted his death. It was envy which committed the first murder in the world, and it was envy which sent Christ to the cross. (See Matt. 27:18.)

The prayer every Christian should pray each day is:

"Let the beauty of Jesus be seen in me;
All His wonderful passion and purity;
O, Thou Spirit divine, all my nature refine
Till the beauty of Jesus be seen in me."

"Bring forth the royal diadem and crown Him Lord of all."

WINTERSBURG

WINTERSBURG, Aug. 5.—Mrs. Lillie Shaffer Moore left Wednesday for Chula Vista in company with her son-in-law, Bert Collins, of Los Angeles, to visit her son, Ray Shaffer, who was injured in an accident. Young people of the Methodist Epworth league held their fellowship meeting Sunday evening after church at the home of Miss Andrea Gardner. The yard was lighted with Japanese lanterns for the occasion and refreshments of ice cream and cake were served during the social hour. Next Sunday

AUSTRALIA IN AID TO TRIBES

QUEENSLAND, Australia. (UP)—The aboriginal department of the Queensland government is establishing a new economic system of production and sale among the black native tribes that might be regarded as almost communistic if it were not for the fact that the system will be administered by missionaries instead of Soviet communists.

The idea is to make the Australian blacks entirely self-supporting through the development of their own native industries and the sale of their products. Model river villages are being established on the Weipa, Arakum and Mitchell rivers, in which natives may live their own lives free of interference from whites.

The principal industries to be developed are agriculture and fishing and missionaries will act as agents for all contact necessary with the outside world.

On some of the Torres Strait islands the natives work their own shell and trepang fishing fleets on a community basis and have their own stores as well.

At Thursday Island, natives are being taught shipbuilding and the repair and care of marine engines. All craft exceeding what the natives may need for their own fishing fleets will be sold through the missionary agents for the benefit of the community funds.

On Mornington Island, a salt works is to be built for the manufacture of salt for the curing of fish—one more step toward establishing complete self-sufficiency for the natives of the islands. It also will sell excess product to the outside world under the new community economic system.

TEXAS WILL TRY STUDENT CO-OP'S

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—A co-operative experiment which may result in a student being able to attend the University of Texas for $125 a year or less will be made here next fall. V. L. Moore, dean of men, has announced.

The plan is not a new one. Dean Moore explained. It has been fairly successful at many northern universities, and should be a real success on our campus."

For the experimental year two houses have been selected. One will be occupied by men students and the other by women. Seventeen students will live in each house. Fundamentally, the plans for men and women are the same. They will share the expense of the house.

The houses have been rented by the university and leased to the students. Each house will be furnished by the occupants.

In the men's co-operative an effort has been made to select boys who can furnish some of the foodstuffs for the tables, with farm boys preferred. Any food supplied by one of the students will be credited to his account at full market value. One of the number will be designated as manager, and will keep house accounts and make a monthly report. Each month the new assessment will be collected on the basis of the previous month's expenditures.

A house mother will be in charge. She may or may not prepare the meals. She will receive her room and board and $1 a week from each boy.

In the girls' co-operative effort a supervisor will be selected who will live in the house. She receives only room and board. The girls will do their own housekeeping and plan their own menus. It is hoped by the sponsor, Miss Dorothy Gebauer, assistant dean of women, the expenses per person will be even less than $15 a month.

Financial and Market News

NEW YORK STOCKS

Chicago Board of Trade

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—(UPI)—Corn prices fluctuated within a narrow range today on the Chicago Board of Trade in mixed trading.

At the close, prices unchanged to 1 cent. September 104½ cents, wheat was up ½ cent, September 81½ cents, oats were off ½ cent, little movement news to guide traders and prices moved moderately in either direction as scattered buying and selling. Most traders were inclined to take the side lines and await further developments before entering into new commitments. Forecasts for dry weather in the corn belt over the weekend were mixed.

Wheat prices started moderately in a quiet market. Strength in Winnipeg generated scattered buying of all futures soon after the opening, and most prices reacted in a reaction and prices declined from the early highs. A local operator was credited with purchases of wheat here against sales in the Winnipeg market.

Business news continued cheerful and gave traders a chance to extend their bullish operations. The steel industry was the best, the best news came that Pittsburgh Steel operations next week would be at 72 per cent of capacity, the highest since early in July.

Traders ignored the tenseness of the foreign situation as they pushed the industrial averages to the best level since 1933, and the railroad average to close proximity of the 1933 high. The only market to reflect international nervousness was the oil market, the Italian bonds again weakened.

Business news continued cheerful and gave traders a chance to extend their bullish operations. The steel industry was the best, the best news came that Pittsburgh Steel operations next week would be at 72 per cent of capacity, the highest since early in July.

The export copper price today was little, 8½ cents, the best level for five years, on demand reportedly resulting from the rush for armaments.

The steel and rail stocks started the year advance which later brought buying into all divisions. Numerous highs were made. In the railroads, the market was off 14½ cents from a point, New York Central at 43½, Baltimore and Ohio preferred at 35½, Southern Pacific at 43, Southern Railway at 38½, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe at 88½, Youngstown Sheet and Tube made a new high of 80 for a fractional gain. Electrical equipment shares were at new highs, Westinghouse up 2½ at 143½ and General Electric at 48 up 4½.

People's Gas touched 52½ for 2½ gain as da new high and Colgate-Edison gained 1½.

Some stock leaders made solid gains with 15% gain to a new high at 84½. Copper shares strengthened under lead of Kennecott up 1½ at 100 and Anaconda, Bausch and Lomb, equipment reaching a new high at 54, up 1½. American Can came back after yesterday's sharp move, gaining more than 2 points. Motors showed fractional gains in quiet turnover.

Dow Jones preliminary closing averages showed industrial up 1½ at 55.75, up 646, utility up 1½ up 5.5.

Sales were 85,278 shares compared with 49,650 shares last Saturday.

Curb sales were 175,000 shares compared with 145,000 shares last Saturday.

All Used Cars Sharply Reduced in Price

O. R. HAAN's used cars represent values never before equaled. For instance a car with 10,000 or 15,000 miles normal life is often driving only 10,000 or 15,000 miles by the original owner—and sold to the second owner as a small percentage of the original cost. The less scratchless the car, the more thorough reconditioned cars of this class may be had NOW.

EDITORIAL FEATURES

SUPREME EGOIST

We have just been reading Secretary of Agriculture Wallace's book, "Whose Constitution". In the last chapter of his book, it is evident that Wallace believes that he and a few other young men are destined to re-make the Constitution, just as the framers of the Constitution wrote a document in 1787. He seems to have the hallucination that he and a few other brain trusters, like Dr. Studebaker, Tugwell and Roosevelt, are to re-make America.

When you see that he repeatedly refers to public forums to educate the people, one realizes that there seems to be a concerted effort to remake our Constitution. Especially is this true when Dr. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education estimates that there will be 10,000 highly paid forum leaders necessary to properly enlighten the American public. Of course, Wallace and Studebaker, Tugwell and Roosevelt want to be the trainers of these 10,000 forum leaders. They imagine that they are students of economics, students of morals, students of ethics and that the public should pay the bill to have them save the country.

Wallace, in his book, points out that the Constitution was sold to the public by having forums presenting it up and down throughout the thirteen colonies. Now, the administration, through its Commissioner of Education, proposes to establish forums throughout the land with 10,000 highly trained forum leaders to sell the new cooperative Constitution to the people of the land.

Nothing that we have ever read that either of these self-appointed wise men (Wallace and Studebaker) wrote have indicated that they have the faintest conception of why ten million people are out of work. Wallace is determined that there must be less competition. If there ever was any book full of contradictions, it is his book, "Whose Constitution". He seems to like to repeat the phrase "free competition and the devil take the hindmost" and that the philosophy of Adam Smith, developed into the doctrine of "slaw and clang". He seems to believe the objections to competition can be corrected by his infinite wisdom. We can eliminate prices, public plebiscites, freedom of contract, liberty of an individual to use his initiative as he sees fit. All of these can be eliminated and these wise doctors, if the people will give them enough money, can bring forth a new rule where everything will be peace, harmony and prosperity. The only way that they seem to suggest to bring this about is to turn everything over to them and let them regiment every human life, all wealth and our people will make progress beyond the fondest hopes. Only the most egotistical human being could believe as they believe.

Wallace tries to point out that economists, during the last forty years, have abandoned the doctrines of Adam Smith. He fails to say what economists. Evidently, they are self-styled economists, like Tugwell, Studebaker and himself, who believe that they are as wise as the framers of the Constitution and can now write a Constitution that will eliminate the principles of economics set down by Adam Smith.

Wallace does not seem to have the faintest idea that the reason we are in the condition we are in today is because the primary principles advocated by Adam Smith have not been put into effect the last twenty-five years, because we have permitted monopolies and special privileges.

We wonder whether he has ever read the "Curse of Bigness", written by Chief Justice

Brandeis. In this book, Brandeis points out that competition is wasteful but he also points out that monopolies are more wasteful. Wallace wants to eliminate competition and have some super-man, like he thinks he is, regulate all human relations, all trade, all initiative. That would mean stagnation and retrogradation to the dark ages. Give an impractical man like Wallace, who never made a private business success, a little power and it certainly goes to his head.

If Wallace regarded public office a public trust, he would not be capitalizing by writing books on a commercial scale. The only reason people buy Wallace's books, is because he has been delegated almost the power of a Czar and people buy his books and read them to try to guess what move his egotistic mind is going to take next. They do this so they can have a little chance to try to protect themselves. They certainly do not buy his books to get logic or any ideas that are practical.

DIPLOMAS

The more we have of adult education, the more the question of the value of a diploma come up for consideration. It is pretty generally conceded by most people who hold diplomas, who are not using the diploma as a method of protection and making their livelihood, such as doctors, lawyers and professors, that the diploma is of mighty little value. Of course, those people who are using these as a method of livelihood try to make the great mass of people believe they are wonderful and of very great value. The more they can make the people think diplomas represent intelligence, service and ability, the more then can collect from the masses, as a result of putting the diploma up on a pedestal and thereby creating in the minds of the great mass of people the idea that these diplomas are actually valuable. This has made the workers desire that their children have one of these documents, painted, by those who use them as a means of livelihood, as being of great value.

On the other hand, the business man who does not use these diplomas as a means of livelihood, but is out on the open market, competing with the world, has little respect for the value of the diploma and cares little for it. He knows it is not the diploma that counts but it is the accomplishments of the individual, whether he has a diploma or not, in which he is interested.

MORE LOANS, MORE DEPOSITS

Under our banking laws, the more the banks loan, the more deposits the banks have. The only thing that restricts them is the reserve requirements.

How can we expect to have sound money and sound banking, when we have such an absurd situation that the more the banks loan, the more deposits they have. Of course, this affects prices and when the loans are reduced, the less deposits they have, down go prices. We have done nothing as yet to correct this potential catastrophe which throws millions of people out of work and bankrupts millions of honest, conscientious people.

If our congressmen were the kind of men they should be, interested in good government instead of holding their jobs, we would not have these kinds of banking laws.

It costs much to be capable of real friendship, but those who are would be ashamed to be otherwise; and would rather suffer than be incapable. —Fenelon.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The personal sympathies of the diplomatic crowd around the state department seems to be generally with the Spanish revolutionists.

The suggestion will be resented officially, of course, for obvious diplomatic reasons, but this will not alter the noticeable fact that the diplomatic set is privately on the side of the outs for the first time in many a revolution.

It is not a question of conservatism versus radicalism, as much as the notion that the rebels are considered "our kind of people."

The feeling will probably not influence the handling of the situation in any important particular. With Italy, France and Germany slipping a helping underhand now and then to opposing factions, it behoves our boys to be careful. They have so far, and promise to continue.

NEUTRALITY

The whack administered to the Madrid government by Third Secretary Wendelin may have seemed to be in line with private feeling here, but was not inspired by it.

What happened was that state departmentalists became excited over news dispatches from Spain indicating the government intended to make the seizure of American property permanent. They told Wendelin to speak out. On reflection, they consider there is not much danger.

There is no reason, legal or otherwise, for us to get mixed up in Spain's troubles. We have a Pan-American treaty requiring us not to furnish arms to revolutionists, but Spain did not join in the treaty. We have a license system on arms, but it is a routine affair. If either the Spanish government or rebels want to buy arms here, they can do it. (No shipments have been reported so far.)

CHEERERS

Official men of Mars hereabouts do not put much stock in continuing suggestions from Europe that a general war may be provoked by the Spanish trouble. They were certainly wrong on Ethiopia. They may be again, but they know as much about it as anyone here, and they are convinced Italy, France and Germany will let the opposing standards fight it out like cock in the pit, while they sit in the stands watching each other to see that no one interferes too much in the fight.

DOLLAR DAYS

Both parties generally scorned small-change campaign contributions in the past. The administrative cost of collecting single dollar contribution, they figured, was about 50 cents. That is, they netted only about half of their small gross receipts.

This year, however, both parties are going into this business as never before. The Democrats have scores of thousands of Roosevelt nominators et al at $1 a head. The Republicans are selling participation certificates establishing buyers as stockholders (unofficially) in the Republican can concern, for $1 a share.

This kind of money-raising is always good publicity, but this year it has likewise been developed into an important money-raising venture. The Republican scheme, for instance, is said by headquarters insiders to be netting 75 cents on the dollar. Their rock bottom estimate is that they will sell about 700,000 shares.

TIMING

Embanishment of John ("Hamlet") Lewis and the C. I. O. crowd from the A. F. of L. may appear to have been a daring move, but from the inside, it was almost a self-protective necessity.

William Green and his A. F. of L. associates did not care or dare to have Mr. Lewis take the issue into the approaching A. F. of L. convention.

The secret of the situation was that it requires a two-thirds vote of the convention to expel anybody and Mr. Lewis could probably control one-third of the convention.

Also, Mr. Green is up for re-election at that convention, and such an outraged position as Mr. Lewis controlling a strong group in the convention might make Mr. Green's re-election an extremely unpleasant experience.

COMPETITION

Something of an inside scramble is on for the vacant job of under-secretary of state, possibly because it provides one of the few offices in the state department which is air cooled in summer.

The insiders say none of the scramblers is likely to get it. Betting favors Norman Davis, the roving ambassador to Europe and perennial delegate to unsuccessful international conferences, but the odds are not heavy.

The appointment may not be made until after election.

R.S.V.P.

Senator LaFollette's progressive conference will be an exclusive affair. It will be held somewhere in the middle west the last of August or early in September and seating will be by invitation only. Probably 50 to 75 dependable progressives (those who can be depended upon to support President Roosevelt) will receive invitations.

Exclusiveness is required, it is said, to keep out the radical element, meaning the Communists and Lemkists who like third parties.

Day By Day In Washington

BY DAVID LAWRENCE
(Copyright, 1936)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Maybe the most complicated and minute system of bookkeeping and cost accounting that will mean, for years to come—if the law is retained—a governmental supervision of business operations comparable only to the red tape which the railroads have to go through before they can increase a freight rate or abandon a branch line.

But railroads have always been acknowledged to be public utilities, and, as such, subject to government regulation because they are natural monopolies. If the Robinson-Patman law was adopted in 1890,

Business men are perplexed over the meaning of the new statute. Lawyers are writing all sorts of analyses and government officials themselves are puzzled as to the true scope of their powers. And most distressing part of it is that, after costly readjustments are made, the law probably will some day be declared unconstitutional, for it amounts to an invasion of the reserved rights of the people even more plainly than did the NRA.

The Robinson-Patman law is neither wholly bad, however, nor wholly good. Its aim is commendable and its objective is worthy. But, in writing the law, an array of group interests were consulted, and, as a consequence, the federal government has usurped power over the business activities of concerns far and wide, from retail to wholesale, which will lead to general avoidance in some instances and prolonged litigation in others. It is another example of class legislation written to benefit a certain group and yet likely to result in higher prices to the consumer as well as in greater handicaps to the independent merchant whom the legislation was designed to protect.

But railroads have always been acknowledged to be public utilities, and, as such, subject to government regulation because they are natural monopolies. If the Robinson-Patman law was adopted in 1890,

Business men are perplexed over the meaning of the new statute. Lawyers are writing all sorts of analyses and government officials themselves are puzzled as to the true scope of their powers. And most distressing part of it is that, after costly readjustments are made, the law probably will some day be declared unconstitutional, for it amounts to an invasion of the reserved rights of the people even more plainly than did the NRA.

The Robinson-Patman law is neither wholly bad, however, nor wholly good. Its aim is commendable and its objective is worthy. But, in writing the law, an array of group interests were consulted, and, as a consequence, the federal government has usurped power over the business activities of concerns far and wide, from retail to wholesale, which will lead to general avoidance in some instances and prolonged litigation in others. It is another example of class legislation written to benefit a certain group and yet likely to result in higher prices to the consumer as well as in greater handicaps to the independent merchant whom the legislation was designed to protect.

The new law, broadly speaking, would prohibit as unfair competition the granting of such allowances as would permit a seller to discriminate in favor of certain of his customers when he gives them a lower price than he does others. The law makes it a punishable offense not only to grant such an allowance but for the seller to "knowingly" to receive such a benefit.

Now, insofar as allowances constitute a form of commercial bribery and have as their primary objective the squelching of competition and the creation of a monopoly in any given field, they are merely another one of the many forms of "restraint of trade" which the Sherman law and later the Clayton law were designed to abolish.

But the new development is the way the law is to be enforced and particularly the way the congress has set up to determine what is and what is not a price discrimination. If a discount is given for quantity purchase, can it be justified on the grounds of economy in production or in selling expense? If there is an economy, should all the customers, even those who buy small amounts, be given the benefit of the same economy in a proportionate amount, for, if there is a saving of overhead, is it proper to charge all that saving to the benefits obtained from a single quantity sale?

The independent may find it harder than ever in some fields to do business because the idea of giving consumers a rebate out of profits is now being developed as a means of competition by large chain stores. Large chain companies in some lines of goods also are going to have their own producing units and eliminate middlemen and brokers. Altogether, there is plenty of disruption to sight as the government, under the guise of correcting economic inequalities, builds up a vast bureaucracy of supervision of the distribution and production processes of the nation and intersects factors that cannot but be reflected eventually in the selling price. In the end, the chains will grow even more powerful than they are today and their profits will increase, whereas the independent merchant will face new handicaps in getting low prices with which to meet his competition.

On the whole, the law is so clumsily written and so lacking in careful definition of standards to be followed by the federal trade commission that it will result, like the Volstead act, in considerable bootlegging and secret buying and selling arrangements which even when thought legitimate will for safety's sake never be reduced to writing.

Had the law been confined to the elimination of plain fraud and clear definition of restraints or of monopolistic practices, its enforcement would have been easier. But aimed as it is at the correction of inequalities in economic life, with many business men being advised by competent attorneys that the law is invalid anyway, there results a confusion as well as a defiance of the act which cannot but affect adversely the entire distribution machinery of the country.

It's another example of trying to do too much in a single law and of assuming, as the New Deal does, that it is the function of government to penalize efficiency of distribution and equalize competition, even though the consumer has to pay more in the form of higher prices.

If the federal government has the constitutional right to say what is or is not a proper quantity discount for the sale of goods at wholesale, it has the right to fix what is or is not a proper price for the consumer to pay at retail. It would have the right to determine every factor of a business operation wherein there was a natural or even developed advantage on the part of one competitor over another. None of these things, according to the unanimous opinion of the nine justices of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Schechter case, can be lawfully done by Congress and the President. But Congress and the President have shown a tendency to disregard the warnings of the unanimous Supreme Court opinion in the NRA because of a belief that the people, in a political year especially, will not be interested in the usurpation argument but in other questions that are less difficult to explain on the stump.

Yet the effect of the Robinson-Patman law may be to increase prices at the retail stores and cause a gradual rise in the cost of living. It may also increase the profits of large producers. It may not help the independent at all, because a manufacturer who specializes in large orders can pick his own customers, and the law, while professing to forbid such discrimination, actually has loopholes enough to permit it.

The independent may find it harder than ever in some fields to do business because the idea of giving consumers a rebate out of profits is now being developed as a means of competition by large chain stores. Large chain companies in some lines of goods also are going to have their own producing units and eliminate middlemen and brokers.
